Windham Selectman Heath Partington is up for re-election.

During his time in office, he has consistently abused the power we have entrusted in him – and there are no excuses.

He has experience as a former Chairman of the Windham Zoning Board of Adjustment, and he also currently serves on the Planning Board. He knows Windham's zoning ordinances, yet his family's use of a seasonal home on Cobbetts Pond hypocritically violates those ordinances he compels you and I to follow.

He abuses his position on the Planning Board by taking a NIMBY approach (not in my backyard) to unjustifiably thwart development for nearly five years on a property that abuts his backyard. He has stifled commercial development on that property as well as another abutting property that would have greatly benefitted Windham.

When others don't support Partington, he vehemently postures that he is a Selectman in Windham's town government.

That is what happened when he recently approached his neighbor on her property. He pressured her to sign a protest petition that would make it even more difficult for the development he opposes in his back yard. When Partington's neighbor wanted to take a little time to read and review the petition, Partington became indignant and left.

But instead of leaving, Partington remained on her property, walked around the house without her knowledge or consent; then returned to knock on her door again. He escalated his intimidation tactics with a veiled threat that she had a code violation in her backyard. He subsequently followed up with a text message that was offensive to the woman.

These are just a few examples of how Partington represents himself at the expense of the town.
